CALV and former CALV President Tedd Rosenstein win national awards

The Commercial Alliance Las Vegas (CALV) and former CALV President Tedd Rosenstein earned national commercial real estate industry awards last week during the National Association of REALTORS® convention in New Orleans.

Rosenstein, of Nevada Development and Realty Company in Las Vegas, received a 2014 National Commercial Award from NAR. He was the lone honoree from Nevada and one of more than 50 other commercial real estate professionals from around the country to earn this annual award from NAR.

Rosenstein serves as a director on CALV's board for 2015. He was CALV's president in 2013 and CALV's Member of the Year in 2014. His professional affiliations and designations include being a Certified Commercial Investment Member, or CCIM.

Also during the annual NAR meetings in November, NAR's commercial real estate arm presented CALV with its Accredited Commercial Excellence (ACE) award. CALV was honored primarily for its success establishing strategic alliances with many other commercial real estate and related organizations as part of its mission to unite, educate, shape public policy and inform commercial real estate professionals throughout Southern Nevada. CALV was honored in the category of governance/structure, one of seven categories within the ACE Awards program.

NAR Commercial's ACE Awards is a prestigious recognition program, acknowledging local and state REALTOR® associations for their commitment to providing commercial services membership, engaging commercial members within the association, and developing their organization as a voice and resource for commercial real estate in their local market. The award highlights associations and their achievements in each of seven accreditation categories for going above and beyond in serving the needs of commercial practitioners.
